

Conflicts of Interest in Vaccine Safety Research

This review article by author Gayle DeLong Department of Economics and Finance, Baruch College, New York documents conflicts of interest within vaccine safety research. She cites how sponsors of much research have competing interests that may impede the objectivity of research on the probability of vaccine adverse events. Vaccine manufacturers, health officials, and medical journals may have financial and bureaucratic rational for wanting to not validate risks of some vaccines

DeLong, G. Conflicts of Interest in Vaccine Safety Research. Accountability in Research, 19:65-88, 2012