Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) acknowledges chiropractic as a benefit

Interestingly the flagship journal of the American Medical Association last month published a review article on back pain and mentions chiropractic in somewhat of a favorable light. Under the header of “Treatment” the article stated the following; “Many treatments are available for low back pain. Often exercise and physical therapy can help. Some people benefit from chiropractic therapy or acupuncture…” This is interesting given the fact that at the last House of Delegates of the American Medical Association another formal resolution was past to make repeal of the non-discrimination language in ObamaCare a political priority. This is our very key non-discrimination language the American Chiropractic Association with it’s coalition of non-MD/DO provider work so hard to get included into this federal law.
